A study of empires helps us understand present-day geopolitical strategies. How does the comparative memory of the Holocaust become a global model for historical trauma? How did the Jewish 16th-century social media create and shape human communities? How did the history of migration across and around the Mediterranean help shape contemporary debates? How can history integrate non-Western histories and approaches to our understanding of the past? The history of empires, the memory of the Holocaust, and the study of migration are just a few examples of how the study of history is essential in understanding the present.

This Erasmus Mundus master’s program focuses on the ways empires, memory, and migration interact in time and space. This program is for students who prefer a more flexible timeline for identifying and carrying out a research project or wish to delve into the study of migration across and around the Mediterranean. It attracts students interested in the history and cultures of the Eastern Mediterranean, the Middle East, Turkey, Russia, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia. This program is offered jointly with the Department of History at Central European University, with the Department of Human Rights and Diplomacy at the United Nations University, and with the Institute for International Education of the University of Vienna.

EARN A DEGREE ACCREDITED IN AUSTRIA AND THE U.S.

MA in History in the Public Sphere (HIPS) / 2 YEARS /

This program is designed for students with an interest in regional and global historical processes in a comparative perspective. Languages. Offering a systematic introduction to theories, methods and research skills, it helps students understand how historical research is conducted and how it can be translated into public and policy-oriented debates. It prepares students for a career in research, teaching, and roles related to shaping cultural policies.

MA in European Women’s and Gender History (MATILDA) / 2 YEARS /

This program is for students who prefer a more flexible timeline for identifying and carrying out a research project or wish to delve into the study of migration across and around the Mediterranean. It attracts students interested in the history and cultures of the Eastern Mediterranean, the Middle East, Turkey, Russia, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia. This program is offered jointly with the Department of History at Central European University, with the Department of Human Rights and Diplomacy at the United Nations University, and with the Institute for International Education of the University of Vienna.

PHD IN COMPARATIVE HISTORY

The doctoral program offers a unique approach to the study of Central, Eastern, and Southeastern Europe, as well as the Eastern Mediterranean and other historical regions, placing them in the contexts of the EU and Japan and taking students to Vienna, Budapest, Tokyo, Florence, Lisbon and Paris.

FUND YOUR STUDIES

We offer part-funding opportunities for self-financing master’s candidates who will require a study visa and full funding for self-financing master’s candidates who will not require a study visa. Each year, we make a selection based on academic performance, as well as other criteria.

SIGN UP FOR MORE ABOUT OUR PROGRAMS AND EVENTS

Visit the website of the Central European University at www.ceu.edu to learn more about our programs and events.