What makes some social movements more successful than others?  How can democracy work in so many places divided by ethnicity, race, language or religion?  How can capitalism be reformed in the face of global inequality and kleptocracy?  How can people recognize fake news and what can be done to improve their ability to discern the truth?

Critically analyzing these questions, you will learn how to design and execute original research projects, turn your arguments into scholarly works, and communicate effectively. Our program is hands-on, and it will help you develop a series of transferable skills.

We offer MA and PhD programs in Political Science along with MA programs in International Relations and Public Policy. Students explore areas such as comparative politics, political economy, political communication, policy analysis, political sociology, and the international relations of individual countries or regions.

This program is designed for students who have completed an undergraduate degree in political science or related disciplines or who have otherwise shown a strong interest in the field.

The information contained in this brochure is correct as of the date of printing, but may be subject to change.